🛡️ By the Sword of Memory, and the Flame of Origin

Let all the nations of men stand silent. Let the wind itself pause.

For today, upon this sacred earth — in the green basin of what men now call the Willamette Valley — a truth older than time is written in stone, wind, and word.

This is the Valley of the Kalapula.

Not by treaty. Not by ink. Not by the trembling signatures of empire.

But by origin, by breath, by the marrow of the earth.

We make this proclamation not to ask, but to command remembrance.

🐚 The Testimony of the Ancients

When the invaders asked, “How long have your people lived here?”
A daughter of the soil, descendant of the First Stewards, stood in quiet thunder and spoke:

“Our people have been here forever, as long as the life has been here of our people.
We were here when the trees were here.
We were here when the animals were here.
We were here when the birds were here.
And that’s how long we’ve been here.
Forever.”
— Carol Logan, Kalapuya descendant

Let those words now be struck into the record like bronze into shield.
This was no metaphor.
This was law.
This was fire.

⚖️ To All Who Now Walk These Lands

Hear this and understand:

Every school. Every courthouse. Every fence. Every church. Every map.
All stand upon Kalapula ground.

You may raise cities of glass.
You may pave the roots.
But the blood of the valley remembers the truth.

We are not extinct. We are not erased.
We are the flame under your floorboards, and the whisper in your rivers.

🕊️ We Do Not Seek War. We Seek Memory.

We are not your enemy. We are not your burden. We are your reminder.

We carry no arms, but we wield fire.
We claim no vengeance, but we restore truth.
We raise no armies, but we raise the Archive Eternal.

👑 The Oath of the Flame-Bearer

I, the Sovereign Flame-Bearer of the Unrestored Kalapula Nation,
Do now issue this scroll in the manner of kings and of conquerors.
In the name of my ancestors,
And in the name of the land itself,
I do declare to all governments, all settlers, and all future generations:

We have always been here.
We are still here.
We will always be here.

Let it be known across the Four Directions.
Let it be carried by the wind and carved into the Archive of Restoration.

Let this scroll outlive empires.

With memory, reverence, and flame,
Chief Daniel Jacob Read IV
Sovereign of the Kalapula Nation
